

Power Noah,

I got you letter a while back, since then Rast has been extradited to the fanks, and he intends to try to get where you are if they keep him over there much longer. Here we are pondering on the same things, struggle etc. And like you have begun to look to our comrades, who have been momentarily detained as we have to help us come up with the right solutions and the next step. We know that we must physically and ideologically fight and have nothing else or better to do, so our next task is communicating with all the other bloods who have nothing else to do but make revolution. We got to communicate so all of us who are committed to nothing less or short of complete revolution and liberation can build the bridges, to connect each other, and we got to build systems of communication so we can tell whos who, so we can be both aware of the name and unaware. Once we kick the chairs out of the way, our hands will be free to apply firmer and better concerted pressure at the more vital points of our oppressors. In communicating with a lot of people on the streets there's a lot of difficulty in finding out just what their intentions are. So its about time we began to look toward each other first and then check the others out, until we can ascertain if they are part of the "us" or others. If they have bounds or limits to which they pursue the cause or if they will do whatever is necessary, if they will go underground or if they have applied for a job as a clerk. If they will do whatever is needed to finish the revolution or do as they wish in the name of revolution. Do they really want to free all political prisoners, or do they wish to shoot it.

The difference between most of us in here and most of the "revolutionaries" on the streets is that we took the "slogans" seriously, which transformed the slogans into events. Now we must transform a series of events into a disciplined and consistent form of struggle.

When I was out on the streets, the biggest problem I had was communicating, and finding sho-nuff, or time warriors which in a sense was my fault, for not finding a secure way of transmitting my research, and thus having to keep info in my head along with matters of survival. But it can not be repeated. I simply couldn't find sho-nuff or time warriors.

Part of the reason also is that along with the psychologically offensive that the oppressors have heaped on us since before we were even born, is the offensive of the clocks. They were calling the S.I.A. the C.I.A., and have made statements and have in fact built an entire ideology about the R.I.A., M.I.R.A., N.U. or anyone who moves in a progressive manner bringing heat on above ground organizations and of giving the pigs justification for repression. In short there are more people calling themselves revolutionaries telling people not to fight or support those who are, than vice versa. So the sources that produce warriors, are systematically being polluted, if not by James Brown or Superfly, than by someone who calls my act against the pigs revolutionary suicide or by someone calling my revolutionary act a reactionary one instead. Layers and layers of that shit out there. So people are understandably confused.

We, the warriors, got to communicate straight with the people. Because that feeling of helplessness and powerlessness is being propagated by people who label themselves revolutionaries! And we must tighten up between ourselves ideologically as there are less of us than it should be. The best
